Športno društvo Tabor (sports society located in the Falcon's Sports Centre Building), Tabor 13, Ljubljana

The building housing the Sokolski dom sports and recreational centre was constructed in 1926 to a design by the architect Ivan Vurnik, well known also for his Art Nouveau design of Ljubljana's famous Cooperative Business Bank (Zadružna gospodarska banka). Sokolski dom is a massive building housing six large gyms. Its exterior is lavishly decorated in an idiosyncratic style combining folklore motifs and geometrical forms on columns and the fasade with expressionist elements such as pointed arched windows.

The interior of the building is surprisingly roomy and well lit from windows and the glazed part of the roof. Particularly interesting is the 13-metre high main gym extending up to the attic. Its walls consist of rows of columns with interestingly arched windows on all floors in between.
