The use of a transportation system within the manufacturing area was realized when transfer of significantly heavy materials started consuming a lot of time, thereby, delaying the processes.

Food Conveyor belts are an integral part of the transportation equipment in industries. These equipments are mainly used to carry heavy and bulky goods within the industrial premises from one location to another.

Major Variants of Food Conveyor Belts

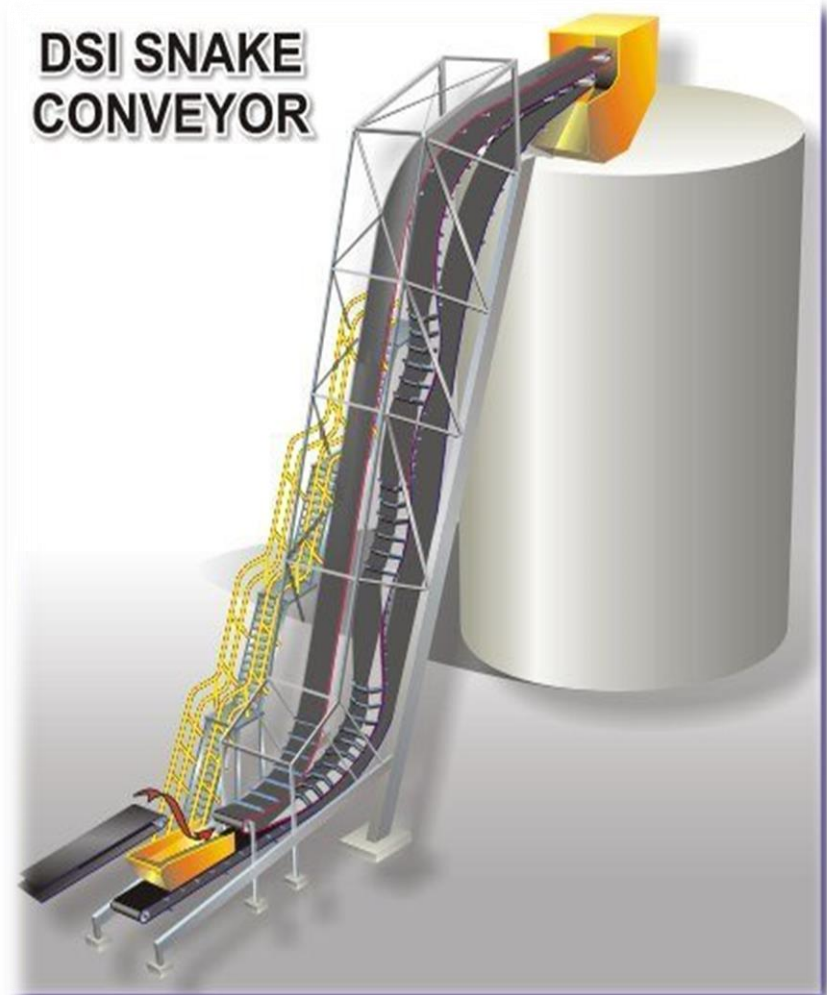

Basic Form

- They form a part of the most basic transportation system which is made up of two or more pulleys. Apart from pulleys, such a system is further made up of a metal frame and rollers that are fitted at regular intervals.
- The platform used for transfer of goods in such a system is made of rubberized material and is placed over the rollers.
- Such systems are commonly installed in packaging and parcel delivery services providing industries, as they have very heavy and lots of good to float from one place to another.

Snake Sandwich

- Mining industries are the biggest buyers of these equipment as they enable the industrial workers to transport, mining material and rocks swiftly from one place to another.
- These types of transportation platforms are exclusively meant to be used in the equipment that used to transport material on inclines.
- The useless complicated principles and common hardware for construction make it very to repair.

Long Platform

The advantage of these straps was realized while transporting materials over long distances.

These are mainly used in the systems with rollers to manage both horizontal and vertical curves.

These products are often used in the systems which cover distances of up to 13 KM and such distances are most commonly covered during mining operations.
